Pdfs and Online Books, - Bovine Spinal Cord Physiology 4th Edition by Clippinger.pdfThe E3 ligases TRAF6 and IRAK1 are involved in murine specific IgE production. The ultimate allergic reaction is mediated by IgE and specific IgE. To better understand the regulatory network involved in IgE production, we screened for a regulatory effector molecule involved in IgE production by employing gene expression microarrays. A high expressed gene up-regulated in an IgE-promoting environment was identified as TRAF6. This TRAF6 has not been previously described as a molecule involved in IgE production. The same screening approach was performed with a second IgE-promoting environment and led to the identification of IRAK1 as a candidate molecule. IRAK1 was characterized as an E3 ubiquitin ligase (E3). E3 ubiquitin ligases have been previously linked to the IgE response, but this was the first time they were found on the regulatory side of IgE. The main activity of TRAF6 is to mark proteins for degradation. We performed two separate approaches to test whether TRAF6 is involved in IgE production by using the mouse anaphylaxis model system: a mouse strain in which TRAF6 is deleted and a reconstituted strain carrying a TRAF6-specific shRNA construct. In both strains we observed an increase in total serum IgE levels. In both strains the decrease in the expression of STAT6 was smaller in the TRAF6 mutant mice. However, the decrease was significantly smaller in the reconstituted TRAF6-deficient strain. IL-4 has been shown to induce the activation of IRAK1
