IL-13 is an important Th2 cytokine that controls the differentiation of T cells in response to allergy and Th2-biased immune responses. IL-13 is also involved in the acute and chronic phase of experimental autoimmune encephalomyelitis (EAE), an animal model of multiple sclerosis (MS). MS is a CNS demyelinating disorder characterized by chronic inflammation and progressive disability of the nervous system. We analyzed IL-13 expression and secretion by human peripheral blood mononuclear cells (PBMC) in the presence of Mycobacterium tuberculosis, a Th1 cytokine inducer. After 2 days of stimulation, M. tuberculosis upregulated IL-13 mRNA levels in PBMC and its levels in the supernatants of stimulated cells, but not in those of unstimulated cells. To investigate IL-13 expression in other immune cells of the CNS, we compared the IL-13

levels in the cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) of MS patients with those of control subjects. There was a significant increase in IL-13 levels in the CSF of MS patients compared with controls, even though IL-13 levels did not correlate with the disease duration. These results suggest that MS is associated with the activation of Th2 cells in the periphery and increased levels of IL-13 in the CNS.
