WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House has threatened to veto bipartisan legislation to protect consumers from price gouging after President Donald Trump signed an executive order that lets energy companies recover costs to rebuild from damage caused by hurricanes and other natural disasters. GOP Sen. Rob Portman of Ohio and Democratic Sen. Chris Murphy of Connecticut introduced the bill, called the Reimbursement of Insurance Costs for Natural Disasters, to help the more than 1 million homeowners who suffered significant damage. The Senate overwhelmingly passed the bill Wednesday. "There is one condition and one condition only to passing this bill," the president said during his signing ceremony on Wednesday. "Any measures that somehow protect the insurance industry at the expense of those people whose homes have been destroyed is just unacceptable to me and the Congress." Trump issued an executive order on Wednesday that directs the departments of justice, treasury and homeland security to "collaborate" with states to "promote" the reimbursement of insurance costs for natural disasters. The order then directs agencies to report to the president in 90 days with a list of actions to "proactively identify, prevent, mitigate, and recover from fraudulent claims" and to share that list with congress. To receive reimbursement under the bill, insurers must first show that they are liable for the damages of a customer's home under the terms of their homeowner's policy. Insurers could then be reimbursed "with respect to the total amount of reimbursement authorized by the insurer" or "reasonable damages incurred by the natural disaster." A budget of $50 million would be available annually to states that are trying to recoup insurance costs. It passed with no Democratic support and with only one Republican, Sen. Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, voting against it. Murkowski said she agreed with Trump's warning that the bill could increase premiums for consumers. "My concern, in light of that, is that this will create higher premiums, higher premiums for most of our constituents who don't have access to property insurance," Murkowski said. "It's important that we look at how that will affect their future." Murkowski's office said she is "pleased" that the president is continuing to listen to her and others "as he considers his options" regarding the industry. The Republican party tried to pass a similar bill in 2016 but Democrats and moderate Republicans defeated it in committee. "The bill will now return to the House, where it should pass on a bipartisan basis
