Data exchange: Export and import of ASCII, binary, and text files containing data related to design work, as well as sheet metal, architectural, or technical drawings. Virtual drafting environment: A drawing created in AutoCAD may be shared by users who have the software installed on their local computers. The application has a virtual drawing environment where any AutoCAD user can interact with the same drawing by pointing to the actual location of the data. If an AutoCAD user accesses a drawing from another application, AutoCAD can provide the drawing's data in a location that is accessible to the other application. The user then can interact with the drawing as if it were part of the other application. Construction Information Modeling (CIM): AutoCAD allows the creation of building models using floorplans, walls, doors, ceilings, and rooms, as well as the importation of building components from other CAD products. AutoCAD Architecture has a built-in parametric modeler feature. It can take a 2D model, add a curve, extrude it, and then add the capability to cut the curve, whether it be a 2D or 3D curve. This can be very useful for modeling buildings, cars, boats, and other objects that require customization. Vietnam's authorities have accused some Western media organizations of colluding with the Communist Party to spread negative information about the country, saying this has hindered tourism and the country's economy. The accusation comes amid a widening row between the Hanoi and some foreign media outlets over the findings of a Reuters investigation into the sinking of a ship in January, which it claims involved irregularities. The Communist Party-run Vietnam News Daily published a front-page article on Wednesday in which it accused the media of undermining the country by presenting false information. "The campaign of the hostile forces has targeted not only the country but also the Party, the government and Vietnamese citizens with such negativity," the article said. It was not clear if the accusations referred to the Reuters reports or comments made by foreign media, which have criticised Hanoi over its handling of the case. Reporters without Borders (RSF) said on Wednesday that a number of news outlets - including the BBC, Al Jazeera, the BBC, Deutsche Welle, France 24, Reuters, Agence France-Presse (AFP) and the AFP - had been targeted by a system of what it called "self-censorship" in Vietnam. "As the government is in a standoff with the media, self-censorship is becoming widespread in Vietnam. Those targeted by this system of self-censorship are the majority of the media in Vietnam," RSF said. It said it was possible that the accusation of collusion was aimed at international media organisations who had investigated the shipwreck, and who have said in interviews they were not allowed to visit the site of the accident. 'Evasive response' The accusation came after Hanoi's foreign ministry on Monday demanded that international journalists accusing the government of covering up details of the incident involving the MV Don Kijang do so
